We have good reason to believe that the dull season is about over, and that for the coming six months Reno will do a lively husiness. The Fall trade is generally good, and the State Fair and Haverly's Minstrels will probably occupy Holiday season will be of much assisttance. A Lesson of the Day. As we look out of our office window and see the bricks piling up on each ther in the new building on Virginia street, our thoughts involuntary associate themselves with the name and business of John Sunderland. We remember him when he first arrived in town, and started in to work. He had a last, we believe, and eight or ten shoe pegs. These, with his strong hands and arms, constituted his stock in trade. Being a good workman he soon had all he could attend to. It was not long before he branched out in selling boots and shoes, and gradually he enlarged his business until he stands to-day the foremost man in his line of business in the entire State. Last year he added hats and caps to his line, and with these two specialties he is kept as busy as a bee, so to speak. Year by year he has added to his possessions, investing his profits in his business, and real estate improvements, until now we find him having a handsome brick residence for his home, and a magnificent two-story brick business block in the very best portion of Reno, besides a stock of goods worth many thousands of dollars. He is deserving of it all: He has justly earned it by the hardest kind of work. His life and work in Reno furnishes an example to the young men around us of what close attention to business and fair dealing with the Congressman Daggett is still at Steamboat Springs, having selected that quiet resort, as a suitable place to permit him to complete a book, the writing of which he commenced in Washington, three years ago. We do not know the title; the story is one of Western life, ranging from Ohio to the Pacific Coast, when the Indians occupied the former and the Argonauts the latter. It will be a recital of incidents familiar to all, and sufficient romantic will be woven into it to make it doubly interesting. We rather think the book when it appears will create a sensation in literary circles. From the acknowledged ability of the author, we are sure that the work will be appreciated by the reading public.

Howling Wind.

Night before last a gentle zephyr started on a ramble, but had not proceeded far until it developed into a rampant howling wind, which whistled around the corners, as if to tell us that the pleasant Summer season was almost over. Thus the night was made unpleasant, but increasing in force, and not ceasing at the bidding of the rising Mutual, Standard, Commonwealth, pranks, greatly to the disgust of everyone in these parts.

Verdict.

The Coroner's Jury, summoned at the inquest held upon the body of Miss Rowenn L. No reasons were discovered. She was buried at Truckce.
